

Troy Fultz is a Senior Vice President, Global Consumer and Operational Risk Manager at Bank of America. Troy was born in Washington, D.C. and grew up in the Northern Virginia area. After getting a culinary degree from Johnson and Wales University in Charleston, South Carolina, he got his Bachelor's degree from The University of South Carolina in Columbia. Troy spent time in the Northern Virginia area after college and after getting married, decided it was time to move back south, living in the Matthews area for 10 years and Pineville for the last five. Married for almost 21 years, his wife, Kristie, is a Registered Diagnostic Cardiac Sonographer for Atrium Health in Pineville.

Troy has a deep commitment to giving back to the Charlotte community in multiple charitable efforts, including being an Ally and volunteer for the LGBTQ community and with his wife, was the Chair of the inaugural VisionWalk (supporting the Foundation Fighting Blindness) in Charlotte in 2007. Additionally, Troy's two sons started a non-profit, Alexander's Toy Trunk, Inc., which provides gifts and support to hospitalized children in the Charlotte area, with an emphasis on the often overlooked babies and their parents in the neonatal intensive care unit. Troy provides unlimited support to his sons' non-profit by performing multiple functions, including managing transportations (due to the age of his children) to Alexander's corporate sponsors and serving as a media liaison for national and local media opportunities, including Good Morning America, People and WCNC. In addition to all the activities that come with being married and raising children, in his free time, he enjoys volunteering in the community, golfing, hunting, fishing, and cooking on his two Big Green Eggs.
